

Gift of Health to Your Baby

Drugs and diseases a mother carries can affect her unborn child, and potentially lead to miscarriage, abnormal growth, death and even the inheritance of the disease, with long term sufferings. Indeed, the health of the mother can affect the child. It is hence important to take checks and preventive measures before conceiving and throughout the pregnancy period.

My Personal Experience

My daughter recently gave birth to her second child. We are so happy the child was born healthy. A few months back, she was told she had streptococcus infection which could affect the child. Her gynaecologist related a case where a child was born alive but dead the next day.

A photo test was taken immediately to confirm the findings and if my daughter had any other health challenges. She was found to have a high level of bacterial attack on her lymph nodes. In the third month of her pregnancy, we had discovered she had H1N1 bacteria in her intestines and the disease, if spread, could affect the child. She often had attacks of colds and flu. Taking long term medication may not be good for the child. With great reluctance, my daughter finally agreed to be put on our nano energy booster patches throughout pregnancy, to protect mother and child from any serious attacks. Since then, she experienced a speedy recovery and the attacks were reduced. Even when her eldest son had repeated occurrences of pneumonia, she was protected.

In our research, we found a number of children have asthmatic, diabetic, high blood, viral and skin disorders linked to their parents. A number of autistic cases have been traced to their mothers, and in one family, up to four generations. The unsuspecting parents were unaware of their health conditions and the children born have to suffer throughout life. Some are even afraid to have another child, and due to the fear of miscarriage. Some are childless because of unknown factors.

Our research hopes to help these parents understand their health challenges before they start a family. It is better to deal with the root causes first, than to work towards solving the symptoms. It is good to pass this gift of health to your children and future generations.

Case Number One

He is in his late forties and is a father of three. Since young, he suffered severe migraines that led to his two strokes and a heart attack. When he came to seek help, his health woes were traced to high autistic viral attack in the cerebrum, something which he hadn't had known. We told him that he was facing the risk of his next imminent heart attack, and that we could only help clear his artery blocks if we were given three months. He had four heart stents two years ago. True enough, his heart attack struck the following month, with a blockage of 75% and 50% in two stents respectively. His operation cost him $30,000, just on the two stents.

Six months earlier, his wife brought their second child to see us. The child was autistic. We did tests on her as well and concluded that all five other family members could be affected. If they had responded earlier, they could have spent only $10,000 to help five family members recover from the virus, and save $20,000. Within 6 months, it was confirmed that the father and his two children were free from the virus and their organs recovering from damage. The father had his artery blocks cleared, and the link could be traced to the parents and siblings to save others.

Case Number Two

She is in her mid-thirties and has been married without a child for six years. She reported she had insomnia, ovary cyst, fibroid, poor circulation and other health problems. We found she had high levels of autistic virus in her brain and uterus, and suffered damaged organs, stress and depression. We advised her not to have a child until the virus was cleared. Within 6 months, she recovered.

She then brought her elder sister who had irregular periods, ovary cysts, tumours removed twice from her uterus, and was in the midst of going for a third surgery and suggested chemo to prevent the spread. She often felt dizzy from migraines and could not sleep well. We found she had autistic virus that damaged both the brain and uterus, with high stress and hormonal imbalance. This was the root cause of her health woes. Both her children are affected. She is currently undergoing our energy therapy.

Case Number Three

She is about 40 and had no children. She had two miscarriages before, and was hospitalised each time. She had a four-month period cycle, leading to potential early menopause. We then discovered she had parasites in her womb. Each time an ovary was hatched, the parasite destroyed it and the foetus had to be aborted. Within 5 months, she was confirmed to be free from parasites, and her organ was repaired. Her period cycle was regular during therapy, and she was given a new lease to have babies!
