

Autism

• There is hope!
by Peter Lim

There are about 20,000 autistic children in Singapore. Based on our five-year research here, we believe that the number could be between 50,000 to 100,000, including adults, due to sexual permissiveness. It is caused by a virus called R1H2 found in the mother's womb where the unborn baby resides. It attacks the brain of the unborn male, while usually attacking the womb of the unborn female. In the process, some may migrate to the brain.

Research in the United States found that out of 200 autistic children studied, 99.9% were traced to this virus. This virus is carried by a partner/spouse or both, and could either be passed down from previous generations or started by the immediate family, through sexual intimacy. But once treated using "energy medicine" in our research, the virus when completely removed, will not return unless associated again with a carrier.

Autism caused by pathogens such as bacteria, viruses, fungi, parasites, allergies, tumours or toxins other than R1H2 is not usually passed down to the next generation.

If the carrier is the husband, 100% of the wife will be affected to affect every child born, with hardly any exceptions. If the carrier is the wife, about 20 to 30% of the husband will be affected. This virus is in the blood and migrating, usually attacking the brain, liver, kidneys, and the sexual organs of both sexes.

Symptoms and Health Challenges

Symptoms of autism will usually not be noticed until the brain is being attacked, to create brain and organ dysfunctions. But once attacked and affecting the cerebrum and cerebellum, it could cause organ dysfunctions, affecting speech, sight, hearing and focus, with migraines, sleep disorders, hyper-activities and temper, motion instability and pain at the shoulder-neck and spine. Children with autism often live in their own world and are anti-social. Some experience all these as early as during childhood, while others during adolescence and adulthood.

Some women do not experience the crises affecting the brain, but the virus is creating havoc in the womb. Some reported continual miscarriages, inability to give birth, or having children born with abnormal growth. Others have fibroids, ovarian cysts, endometriosis, irregular menses, heavy discharge and even womb cancer. In recent times, we have traced the virus to affect cancer of the brain, kidneys, liver, womb and prostate. In one case, we found the virus was the cause of two strokes and two heart attacks in spite of four heart stents placed just two years before, with 50 to 75% blockages. The continual migraine attacks had narrowed the blood vessels to lead to strokes and heart attacks. This virus could lead to Parkinson's disease!

There is Hope of Recovery

Up to recent times, there is little hope of recovery for those who are attacked by the autism virus. The situation will usually get worse and worse. But there is great hope from our research discoveries. Out of 300 cases studied here using "energy medicine", 90% had recoveries of about 70 to 90% depending on the severity. The earlier the treatment, the better the chances. But there is still hope for those severely affected, but with lesser results. This paves the way to meaningful parental and professional interventions for character building and skills.

In recent times, we have had evidence the virus could be removed within three months; and repair of the brain, womb and sexual organs could be by stem cell energy from six to 24 months. The 10% not benefitting from this are those who do not comply. Every case that follows the guideline will have almost 100% hope.

Once the virus is detected in a child or a parent, it is wise for the rest of the family members to be checked, and to link to the families of the siblings, to put an end to this virus misery and to prevent the effect on future generations. A number of children could now even talk, with better behaviour and focus. This "energy-medicine" could be an answer to over 90% of our other health challenges, with no side effects and for all ages!
